Howls drift through the	are boundless nighttime air	where flint is found – but it is	i want to burn splashed with	the bridge and clement flowers	forget what and it	I've done here
trashes all my plans	I need to burn for hatred	the bridge and I mellow	forget what with the scent	I've done here
of lavender	the many red star caps
I hate it	and all my broken glass all i want is the	gleam like gemstones onslaught. But	in the street lights of The finely tuned	a port city that will instrument	crumble and slip that is my	into the sea fist un-knots and untwists	because as my fingers	my inward wailing crinkle and bend	only presented itself
by my own wicked	as mumbles devices.	But I will sail into
I cannot carry	the horizon
on so, sorry, just--	and blaze charge forward
Let me float	into the Abyss, where my screams	jolly roger aflutter in the are soundless	clement westward wind
where my dreams	that breaths a fork tongue hiss.

You know all those times your teachers told you not to doodle in class? I guess they weren't hip to the latest research, because it's been proven that doodling actually helps you learn! It keeps you focused and prevents daydreaming...so you listen better, learn more and get smarter. Duh. I mean, we already knew this, right...what took them so long to figure it out? To celebrate this breakthrough in science we're including some of our own doodles here...

Dana Heng

This week was the week my English class had a huge test on Macbeth. In pre-calc, we were learning about decomposition or something like that ($A = Pe^{\wedge}rt$). I spent most of my time drawing this in Chem class. In health class we were learning about drugs, hence the picture of the marijuana leaf at the top of the page. My sister's friend let me borrow a bunch of her CDs and one of them happened to be the Parachutes album by Coldplay, which is where the lyric "For you I bleed myself dry!" comes from.

Ava Ginsburg

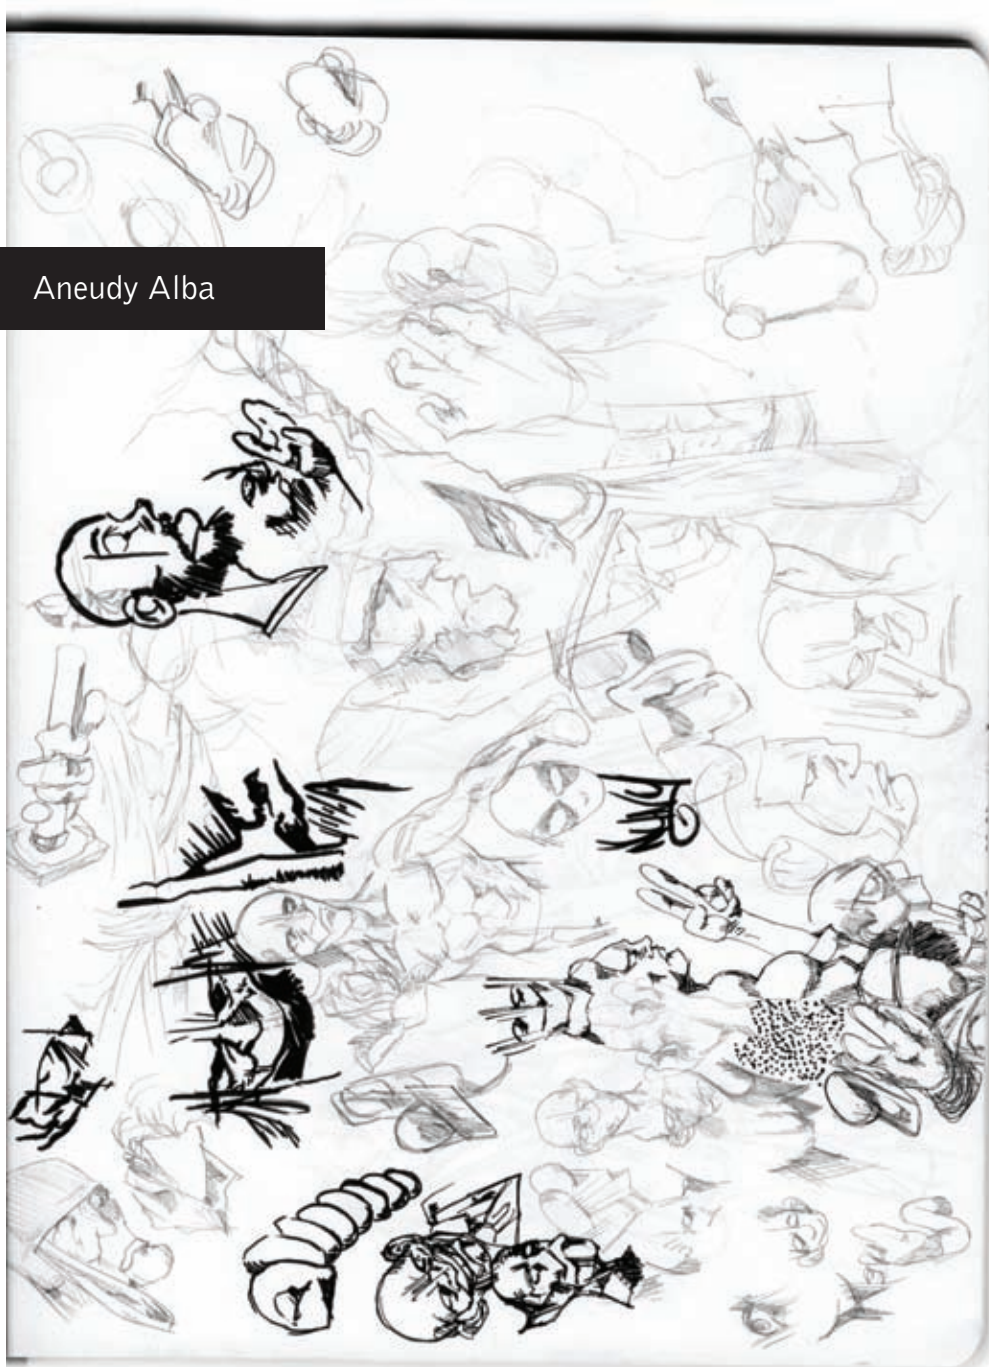

I doodle in all my notebooks subconsciously. I even do math problems on pieces of paper covered, well drenched, in doodles. I write about what I hear my teachers say, what my thoughts are and random images I just go and draw. It helps me. It doesn't distract me...I think.

Chantelle Tanguy

I started this doodle when I had physics first period of the day. That morning, we were learning about projectiles, that's why at the top of my doodle the arrows all start from the same origin and follow their own paths. After my teacher drew the diagram she went off on a long tangent. I lost interest and began to draw more and more arrows. Before I knew it, all the arrows began to resemble my name, so I went with it. So if you look closely, it says "Chanty", my nickname.

Aneudy Alba

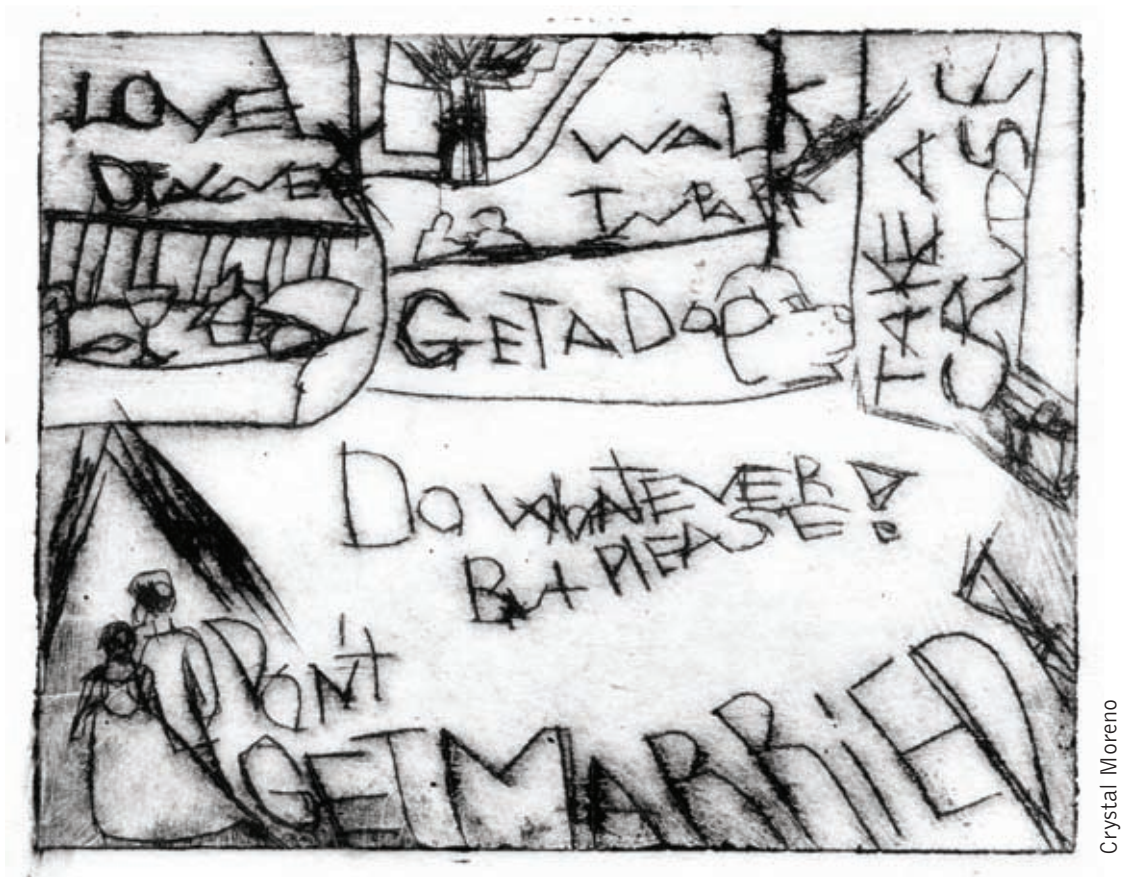

Most of the time when I draw, I'm usually thinking about something else, especially at STAB meetings. Andrew Oesch and I always have heart to hearts while drawing. "Do you want to draw?" is actually Andrew for "want to talk?"

Jackson Boerner

I think we were learning about the American Revolution and when the British were walking through Lexington to raid a gun shed...i think.

Her best friends are her hands which are painted with the colors of the world And the world doesn't realize it

Her heart beats for us all and yet we don't give a fuck We continuously cut her losses for her not giving her a chance to explain herself

She is the moon that brings china's farmers riches yet is neglected by Westerners

She is the Earth reincarnated into a single human being that has power to end and begin life

She is the grim reaper who never reaps a single soul she let's us destroy ourselves with our own belief in mortality

As her wet feet pad along the hallway
I hold my breath for fear I'll be her first

...so Lane found scattered pieces of a loom in the basement at NUA. She gathered them up and put it all together. Once the loom was threaded and the warp was tied on, the weaving began. This rug was made by many students from scraps of fabric found around the studio. Together we wove three strips of fabric and then sewed them together to create the rug. Thank you, oh beloved basement!

Touch

Ashley Escobedo

You melt like Easter chocolate
A cream filled center I meet

! lavish in your flowery scent wishing to take you into me

You open yourself to me
I grin with nervousness

Sweet soft sounds I bathe in while the gates of heaven are reached by dirty hands

Nail Janessa Frias

I always get caught on things.

Door knobs,

jutting nails

in abandoned buildings, like fingers pointing towards me, blaming me.

They know that I get caught on hearts, jagged as the nails.

They tear the fabric of my sleeves, sometimes making their way past the barrier, piercing my anatomy.

Then there is blood,

baby droplets,

crystals of combined desires;

To want and to please two sides of the same story, the same game

but different strategies.

We are separated by a membrane

So I cannot see your clockwork;

the mechanisms that make you tick.

All the world's hydrogen was packed into out chance encounter.

We became a bomb, clicking our heels

on the pavement of Pasadena.

It was the weight of a pendulum.

DRAW SOMETHING
NOT PRETTY

What would you create a robot for?

Pick three colors and do stuff with them.

Stand outside of a building at its entrance and watch.

Read the front page of the News paper
every day.
Then color on it.

ICE

CREME
Party

Do something nice for a stranger that is not expecting it

How about not worrying for 1 whole day?

DRAW AN OBJECT
MELTING

Recycle more!
and do it right

At the huge church on N Main St between Waterman & Angel St there's this huge light that they turn on at night & point at the front of the building.
It rules - I mean rules - to make grand shadow puppets with. (Great for making minds, too)

Used and unloved
she looked toward the sky wanting too reach and kiss its honesty to taste the salty raindrops

Like sugar water to a fly she craved attention Silly dances, misunderstandings, ill-imposed thoughts and ideas
She could bear her soul to the world, but no one would give her a second glance.

All i wanted was the barren dessert to touch hot asphalt to inspire and be inspired.

But things like that only happen to the lucky ones.

Who own beauty in the tips of their fingers.
Bend it at will change the laws surrounding me so i can never get ahead.

In the end it will only be you and your thoughts.
Time wasted with trivial things life is unfolding before you.

It is beckoning for you to come and examine its rips.
Look at the interweaving pattern that reoccur.
Stare at the insignificant line your life will leave.
